the average for the whole would be materially lower.

The association's report is so distributed, both geographically and by industries, as to be a fair index of our influstrial conditions. It is based on the actual state of industrial activity in 275 blants normally employing nearly one-half of the total aggregate number of persons officially reported as engaged in industry last year. The only except done there is doubtless to be included. Lesion Business Meeting and Social.

It is proposed to continue the report and to extend it so as to make it more broadly representative. General conclusions are often dangerous, but the foregoing facts seem to warrnat a few suggestions. In the first place, the report shows an improved condition over that of the summer also of September. The volume of employment among industrial work has been positively diminished. This, of course, is most gratifying and encour-aging. On the other hand, the reporclearly reveals the wide margin between present conditions and what would be recarded as reasonably satisfactory, or

The only exception there is doubtless to be included the which should be noted is that the further adjustments within many lines report does not completely cover all of of industry. Moreover, it must be remembered that such conditions as the present make for the keenest kind of competition for a share in the lired

the state, and a reasonable measure of steady employment to all of the men and women accustomed to support them-
